another Voyage round the World. I sail in a few Weeks.

I have no Political News from Home to tell you of. Affairs of that sort seem to go on tolerably smooth there. The Expectation here has been very strong & general that a Peace would shortly take Place. The Arrival of the Mail yesterday has however in a great degree dissipated their Apprehension - it being said that the Ultimatum of the English will by no means be acceded to by Buonaparte. & that he insists on their giving up the Cape. Leyden, & all other Captures of that Sort from the Dutch, as well as all the West India Islands that have been taken from [illegible]

Dutch, Even more so than it has been; considering all Circumstances be Still, Even more so than it has been; considering all circumstances be Still, Even more so than it has been; considering all circumstances be Still, Even more so than it has been; considering all
