grape, (aqui. folium (Berberis), a decoction of which serves as a tonic, and is also their remedy for venereal —— A decoction of the white flowering or poisonous Camass, furnishes an emetic, ~~and~~ and that of the Cucumber vine (Sicyos Oregonas) both an emetic and cathartic. The root of a species of fern, growing among the moss which covers the limbs of the maple and other trees in damp situations, is chewed as an expectorant and is made into a tea as a remedy for gonorrhoea. The herbs used to produce abortion or effect sterility, I do not know. A powder made from the tail of the rattlesnake as first noticed by Dr. Geo. Suckley. U. S. Army. is employed by some tribes for the former purpose as ~~well~~ well as to expedite natural labor; but violence is more often resorted to, by the women of the coast. Small pox, the Coast tribes do not pretend to treat by medicine; but as mentioned in my report to Capt. McLellan those of the interior claim to have remedies for it. The inside bark of the "Skunk-wood" chewed up serves as a poultice, and the juice of the "Colts-foot" as a fomentation for bruises and sprains. Women during their periods of menstruation, bind the twigs of the hemlock spruce, round their bodies; but this would seem to be a species of charm. These twigs are also used as a bed for the sick. For gonorrhoea females also smoke
