"My son, what people have done this? but this son did not reply, but asked the father where his mother had gone. The father answered he did not know. Probably she had gone out on an occasion. He knew better for she had been gone a whole day. The son said "I want her to get me something to eat. for I am very hungry. I dont wish any of the food here". This he said, although he knew who had cut his head off and where his mother had gone. After repeating the question "What have you done with my mother" five times he disappeared, going down as she had done, through the floor. On reaching the water, he took two hairs from his head, laid them on it, and they became a canoe, which he got into and followed his mother to his grandmothers. His father meantime did not see where he went to; but rushed out of doors, looking for him, intending to shoot him with his bow. Not finding him, he went into the other lodge, where his five new wives were. and asked them They said they did not know. he did not live there; but in the other room. There was one, his favorite, to whom he said, "Perhaps you have hid him, and want to steal off with him". She answered, "Are you not ashamed to talk so." You are a chief, I am not" This was not true however, for she was the daughter of a great chief. Meantime the son reached his grandmothers house, which was a cave under water, very strong, and the door made so that she alone could
