Pon reflection when in Bd Lane I should from the information it expressed of which I scarcely felt the consciousness which I found not acknowledge even to myself while there — But all my doubting fears are now at an end & the future presents to my view nothing but happiness unclouded save by the separation from my family to which the connexion I am about to form will condemn me — We think & feel so much alike on every subject connected with domestic felicity that to you it is unnecessary I should expatiate on it — my dear Father can never be put out of countenance with me without tears in his eyes — he is so entirely dependant upon his children for his happiness that on his account I dread the event — but will depend on his affectionate care & protection — Parting from the rest I can bear to think of, but he is at the declension of life and a thousand painful ideas crowd upon mind but thanks Heaven his health is still good & promises to do so in all [illegible] the expiration of a year

Mr Cranch read to me the passage in his letter entended for your perusal which expressed my regret for the loss of your letter, every, perhaps I should say to your husband having so much to occupy his attention instead of his forgetfulness — I suppose my Lady had an anxious desire communicate important information to her absent Lord — a thought as many of his, as the Philosopher says "Passeth possession" I hope my dear Mrs C to receive from you a long letter containing those of your excellencies by which I may profit, previous to taking orders both