concurrence; and to express to you the great pleasure it will give him to see you at the establishment, as soon as it is arranged, and of furnishing you at any time with the most breed of horses or neat cattle, the Country or the farm affords. To the lover of a good horse, as you are or used to be, it will be a treat to visit him.—

Your friends have great confidence in the public utility of the establishment, the less in the profit to them. Its success is ardently desired by everyone but by none more than by your friend and humble Sect
