I hope you will see Dr Torrey in October when he comes to town and thank him for his offer, letting him at the same time that I do not yet feel as if I could return without [illegible]. I have no objection to joining him in establishing a laboratory, when I return, but I will write to him hereafter from Leipsic. I wish you would also ask him whether he wishes me to [illegible] and if so on what [illegible] and if there [illegible] to purchase me a check on Glyn Mills for £5 pounds which will cover all expenses of packing and freight likewise to inform me the amount of the same. [illegible] for £5 will be more [illegible] for the last account. Your Head people are pleased with your book. I see it is [illegible] as time permits. It is well got up but I do not like the portrait. I shall come out straight [illegible] I thank [illegible] my various matters are settling up my bills before I leave. I made a mistake in my last letter about Wheaton. He was not the Academy but the Faculty of the University who confer the degree upon him. I so flattering a manner; our new Minister Mr Bonglass seems not likely to do us much credit either as a gentleman or as a diplomatist. He speaks neither French nor German, and appears to me at least a shallow ignorant conceited gentleman. I hope you will find his ideas of Legal Practice are. I will only mention that after his arrival here we all agreed to pay our calls to him preparatory to calling upon him. The others left their cards in person. I sent mine and to my astonishment had it returned to me [illegible] with the information that Mr Bonglass did not know the gentleman and therefore could not receive the card !! I mentioned the circumstances to the Rev who subsequently told me that Mr Bonglass was very much surprised that I could suppose that he would send any gentleman's card back to him. I subsequently met Bonglass at Dinner at the house of an English gentleman here. He was very [illegible] in his manners but did not allude to the matter of the card. There was no doubt whatever that his servant had taken back the card with the message above after taking it in to show it to Mr Bonglass. I have therefore set down Mr B as a man who does not know how to behave like a gentleman and I have never, & very many [illegible]
