The principal streams entering these waters from the east ~~are~~ commencing at this point are the following
The Stek-chass, commonly called the Cibiteus or Falls river, a bold stream ~~heading~~ rising in the snow hills of the Cascades and emptying into ~~Budds~~ Inlet the head of Budds Inlet at Olympia, near which town there are falls affording fine water power.
The ~~Puyallup~~ Nisqually, a somewhat larger river, ~~rises~~ as is supposed in the ~~mountains~~ range between Mt Rainier & St Helens & ~~empties~~ rises into Puget Sound passing through the Prairie of the Nisqually & a little above the fort of the Puyallup ~~supposed by~~ believed by Dr Tolmie the chief Factor of the H.B. Co at this valley to head in the South Fork of Mt Rainier, and falling into Commencement Bay,
The Duwamish or ~~entrance~~ Elliott Bay above the town of Seattle. This river has two principal forks, the Southern, called by the Indians the Smalth-to and by the settlers White river, from the color of its waters, rising in Mt Rainier & the other called superiorly the Nivos-kopi and Green river heading with the main Yakama ~~at two pass, by which the name of Nisqually was at first erroneously given~~. The North fork of the Cascade range follows the course of these branches for some distance, thence turning off southerly to Utilacoom & Nisqually, ~~the pass by which the name of Nisqually was at first erroneously given~~ from the Yakama & which the people of Nisqually ~~supposed~~ first supposed to be the source of the Nisqually ~~from which~~ ~~was the mistake arose~~ ~~was that of two Indian trails, one~~ ~~of error was in supposing that this~~ the error arose in ~~the~~ an imperfect knowledge of the country and the fact that the trail usually Yakama Indians
