from the water, there is reason to believe that the same depression continues northward, & there is no doubt that from Lake Saquit river by way of Whatcom Lake & across the North-fork a good trail can be carried to Nooksack river. At the foot of the country north of Bellingham Bay is

Heavy rains bring down considerable bodies of water transparent the rapid & all of them swell greatly as may be supposed from the melting of snow on the mountains. This case is rapid & none of them can be considered as navigable even for short distances though small canoes enter those of the larger. They are bare deltas of low land at their mouths & generally tinged. Channels.

The country north of Bellingham bay appears to be level as far as the range beyond them Stream.
