acts of your March 9th

Salt [illegible] May 11th Sunday 1845

I enclose a letter from Mr Webster to Mr Hall which will explain itself. Mr Hall begs that you will not let the government suppose that you resident W. F.

My dear George. in Oregon is not permanent.

We had the comfort and happiness to receive the day before yesterday three letters from the Pacific one from each of the absent ones to begin with Frank, his greatest experience seems to have been the fleas in the Sandwich and an encounter with a black officer. however I do not wish to infer that his letter was not manly and in fact I felt much relieved that he seemed to have been much interested with the picturesqueness of his position and also with its advantages which he must not be allowed to forfeit by his own sense. his volatility being so great that I rely more upon his affections than his resolves for him I am in fear if he fails to do that will be the rock upon which he will split if he fails to be worthy of his name and my love and hopes for him —

I am sorry my dear Sir to see Fanny for the tone of your letter of the that you seem rather despondent & rather disappointed in your expectations. We hear that a great many sturdy Illinois farmers are about emigrating to Oregon which will cause a favorable change in the state of things. I really hope you will not be discouraged for there are those who look to your filling some high political station and I am sure that more interest is taking for your advancement than ever before, Mr Everett Hall has been ill with gout, I rather think his health is failing. no man can hold out long with such habits of life, remember that when you want any thing very that you should let us know at once and among the rest. Mr Hall has doubtless great influence for you but he has habits of procrastination and should much time in leaving town and proceeding to his beautiful estate near Newport. tell him he knows that you want he can cooperate with him. I am not without influential friends. your last letter gives no more particular accounts of your journeys and why you should visit those travels, that would interest us. and why you should visit those travels, that would interest us. and why you should visit those travels, that would interest us.
