My Dear Mother

I was very glad this morning to get two more letters from home one from you and one from Papa. I could hardly realize that you had just heard of the arrival of the Abyssinian P. seems to me as if I have been abroad at least two months, when, in reality, we have only been on shore about two weeks. You need not suppose from this that I am tired of Europe already, but that it seems to be the case with everybody when they come abroad for a short time that they have been away from home longer than they really have. In this short time we have seen a considerable part of Scotland. We have been to
