Voyage to the Pacific Ocean.

The second voyage was to the Pacific, or rather to one of the Canals or arms entering Millbanks Sound. I was undertaken in [illegible] to the Rocky Mountains on the Lake of the Hills he ascended Peace River wintering at what was afterwards called Ft Dunvegan. In the Spring ascended to its southern source, came down upon Fraser R. which he was took for the Columbia, descended it to what he calles West Road R. & thence crossed the Mauvais Range to Bentincks Arm.

Athabasca. In the Kristineaux language a low, swampy country, subject to inundations.

Unjigah River. Drives its name of Peace River from a point where the Kristineaux and Beaver Indians settled their disputes, "the real name of the river and point being that of the land which was the subject of contention." "When this country was formerly invaded by the Kristineaux they found the Beaver Indians inhabiting the land about Portage la Loche, and the adjoining tribe were there when they called Slaves. They drove both these tribes before them, when the latter proceeded down the river from the Lake of the Hills, in consequence of which that part of it received the name of the Slave River. The former proceeded up the River, and when the Kristineaux made peace with them, this place was settled to be the boundary."

It would seem therefore, as in fact Mackenzie afterwards remarks the Kristineaux have moved west, or more strictly to the west.

Ft Dunvegan. "The number of people belonging to this establishment amounts to about 300, of which 60 are hunters. Although they appear from their language to be of the same stock as the Chipewyans, they differ from them in appearance, manners and customs, as they have adopted those of their enemies the Kristineaux."

Ft Dunvegan. At this place the Indians informed him that they had been to hunt at a large lake called by the Kristineaux the Slave Lake [Lesser Slave Lake] which derived its name from that of the
