

IT WAS URSULA whose gentle tread
Bore round the broad-rimmed wheel of oak
That whirled, and hung, and whirled again,
As though she timed it with her heart.
And when it stopped, her fingers ran
Over the spokes until it whirled,
A moment hung, and whirled again.